MISCELLANEOUS READING [FOR THE GAZETTE. TO THE OLD YEAR -- BY J. WEST VEITCH.

Old Year, why leave us? Thou hast stayed With us in joy and woe! When young thou gamboled 'round and played,

Now wherefore must thou go?

Bright hopes came with thee, they have diedDreams of a blighter day,
Have floated past me on the tide,

That bears thee far away!

Old Year, why leave us? In thy glades Some beauteous flowers have bloomed! And deep within thy darkest shades, Some pleasures lie entombed!

I'll cull those flowers, and they shall form A wreath to deck fate's brow,

And those dead pleasures, I will warm, Back into life-as now.

Old Year, why leave us? Thou did'st bring

Some happy hours to me! And now in sadness I must sing, A parting song for thee!

Days that have passed so free from pain! Homes that were golden bright! Time will not bring you back again!

Oh! stay with me to-night! Old Year, thine hour has come at last!

From you old mossy fanc, I hear thy death knell tolling fast, My prayers have been in vain! Farewell "Old Year"—and thou art dead!

When life's New Year grows old,

Methinks I wait with half the dread,

To hear thy sentence told! Washington City, December 31st, 1858. M. BERRYER, THE FRENCH ADVOCATE This learned advocate who has acquired so wide and just a celebrity by his defence of the Count de Montalembert, is sixty-eight years of age and a native of Paris. He received his education at the Jesuit College of Juil-175 ly, there imbibing very strong religious notions that have tinged his whole subsequent career, and in compliance with his father's wishes (who was himself a distinguished advocate) was brought up to the bar, though there is reason to believe he would himself have preferred the church. He was called 600 to the bar in 1813, and was employed the very following year as junior counsel, under his father and M. Dupin, in the great trial of Marshal Ney. Again, some years ago he was engaged to defend one Dehors, who had been twice condemned to death, but had appealed to the High Court at Paris, where M. Berryer's eloquent pleading procured his acquittal; and such was the man's gratitude that he pushed into the advocate's hands a bundle of bank-notes. M. Berryer, however, begged in return that he might be allowed to make the man's son and daughter a present, and so saying, he divided between them the notes just given him by Dehors. M. Berryer is beyond all doubt facile primus of all French advocates, and perhaps the greatest since Mirabeau. He is rather short and square, with a fine intellectual head, expressive eyes and features, and a voice of great power as well as sweetness in all its cones, and it is impossible to hear him without having the attention rivetted and the mind fascinated by the powers of his oratory. FINE BRITISH REVIEWS AND BLACK WOOD'S MAGAZINE.
